While nominally engaged in drafting his speech of acceptance, he is in reality fortifying himself with material upon which he will make his fight. And his aim is to be as thorough in the presentation of the indictment against the Wilson administration as he was in his insurance investigation.

For this reason he is averse until he asc, to making any public statements. Just now he is concentrating the Mexican situation.

Hughes feels his case would not be benefited by captious criticism. He believes that in the Mexican crisis it is the duty of all Americans to stand by the government. But he will draw a sharp distinction between the government and the administration.

He feels strongly with regard to the unpreparedness of the nation adequately to meet the Mexican crisis, as shown in the mobilization of the National Guard. He will not spare words in denouncing.

the mobilization of the National Guard.
He will not spare words in denouncing that incompetency of the administration in the matter of preparedness. He will demonstrate that two years have been wasted in which the nation might have been so well prepared that any question of trouble in Mexico could not have arisen.

Further developments of the plans for the coast-to-coast campaign include the shortening of Mr. Hughes' speeches to a possible 1,000 words. He believes the attention of the people can be much better compelled in crisp discussions of that length than in long-drawn-out addresses. When occasion requires, he will elaborate on local issues, but his present purpose is to be direct, forcible and brief.

CAR SHORTAGE

Southern Department Will Be War Department, in Statement, Also Tells of Border Medical Preparations.

Complete reorganization of the administrative control of the army along the Mexican border was announced yesterday by the War Department.

The Southern Department, commanded by Maj. Gen. Frederick Funston, and heretofore embracing the territory from Brownsville, at the eastern end of the boundary line, to the California line, is to be divided into three parts.

The new Southern Department, still to be under the southern Department, still to the under the southern Department along the department last night issued a denial of reports that improper railroad service is being furnished the National Guard to the border. The statement is as follows:

"These criticisms are unjustified. The Pullman Car Company and the railroads are doing everything possible to move organizations with dispatch and comfort."
